"BRADSTREET'S" COTTON REPORT.

The August cotton report to Bradstreet's shows the progress of the crop from July 21 to August 24, the average date of the mail replies. The previous report indicated that the eastern half of the belt had had almost a monopoly of bad weather conditions, while, on the contrary, the south west reported an exactly opposite state of affairs. Attention was called to the dissimilarity of the weather prevailing in the two sections, and it was shown that while the East, owing to continued rains, had earned the name of the "wet belt," the more westerly states were enjoying an almost uninterrupted period of seasonable weather. Late dispatches, however, indicated that a change was just then occurring, the consequences of which would be shown. s change was just then occurring, the consequences of which would be shown consequences of which would be shown in the August report.

The effect of these changes has now become apparent, and the consequences are found in the lowering of the crop condition in the southwest, while in the East, particularly the Carolinas, the crop has gained considerably. The reason assigned for this marked decline and advance respectively is to be found in the generally hot and dry weather which has ruled throughout August. This, while favorable to the further development of the plant in the eastern half of the belt, was detrimental to the conton further west.

In the comparative summary table

In the comparative summary table given herewith the nature of the weather during August is shown. In addition, the general crop prospects, as viewed by the correspondents on August 24, are given, with like figures for 1885 and 1884. The details by states are also shown, with comparisons, and it is safe to say that the record thus made, coming as it does from the same sources as in previous years, will fully repay the attention bestowed The prospects on August 24 were not so favorable for the gathering of an average crop as they were at the same time last year, except in the Carolinas, Florida, Arkansas and Tennessee. The lateness of the present season, however, makes the ultimate outturn, liable as the crop is to great and sudden changes, a matter of some doubt. The late date of picking, as compared with last year, is shown by the summary table. The details as to states show that the warm, dry weather following a season of abundant moisture was instrumental in causing a favorable change in the Carolinas, Geor-gia, Florida and Alabama, from all of whom a "fair" report comes. In Missiswhom a "fair" report comes. In Mississippl also crop conditious are fair, while in Tennessee they are almost good. In Texas the drought had the effect of lowering greatly the prospects of the crop, and they are placed now as less favorable than those at the like period last year. From Louislana and Arthan those at the like period last year. From Louislana and Arkansas a more favorable report comes than from Texas, the fruing conditions practically being similar, only with less intensity. The usual accompaniment of dry, hot weather, shedding and rust, are present to a great degree in Texas, and to a correspondingly less degree in the other states mentioned. The rapid recuperation shown in the eastern half of the belt from the effects of the bad half of the belt from the effects of the bad condition previously ruling was in many cases a matter of surprise. No doubt much ground was lost in the "wet belt" the crop in this section is now in a better condition, comparatively speaking, than it is in the section which was not thus troubled. As was shown by Bradstreet's last report, the effects caused by abundance of rain are much easier to overcome than if the opposite were the case.

Late telegraphic dispatches show that the weather in the South, with the exception of Georgia and Arkansas, is hot and dry. In those states seasonable rains are reported, and, in the latter state especially, are calculated to improve Stencils, Checks, Badges.
